

The Pluto Observer

Watchdog to the Solar System

Earth Edition

March 2006

Bugos Bounces Back

The Pluto Observer's star reporter, Jonco Bugos, is once again under attack by agents of the Illuminati in their continued efforts to silence any solar system reports from Earth not sanctioned by their secret enclave of global movers and shakers.

In addition to tampering with Mr. Bugos on a daily basis, including harassment by telephone, email and fabricating local gossip by which his reputation as a visionary interpreter of current events for our publication is viciously "muck-raked", Illuminati covert operatives successfully invaded the Bugos home and sabotaged the computer on which The Pluto Observer Earth Edition is created and uploaded to the Internet. Undaunted, however, our illustrious and admittedly underpaid employee is back, exporting documents to a secret public computer from his own Canon StarWriter word-processor, as yet untouched by the Illuminati terrorists. Because of his efforts as our main Earth reporter, still daring to work out of his home on our award-winning Earth Edition, The Pluto Observer will continue to provide solar system news and commentary vital to the future of planet Earth.

The Earth Edition format may change but it will remain "the lone torch of truth" lighting Earth's darkest days.

BOTM Awards Create Plutonian Precedent

For the first time since its inception in the September 2005 issue of the Observer, the Plutonian Backhand-of-the-Month Award will be bestowed upon more than one recipient. The reasons are so obvious they immediately brought to light the two candidates for the monthly award, which continues to expose errant groups of people rather than individuals themselves.

It's a "no brainer" that the March BOTM Award should go to the White House Press Office for attempting to conceal the fact that the Vice President accidentally shot someone while hunting quail. And it's only fitting that the national news media share the March BOTM Award for devouring the story like a flock of vultures fighting over a road kill the size of a chipmunk.

In America, where careers are often made or destroyed by publicity, words and sound-bytes sometimes make molehills into mountains.

U.S. Fingers Health Costs

The prognosis for health care costs in the U.S. suggests a terminal condition for every American pocketbook. According to a recent study, one out of every five dollars spent in the U.S. by 2015 will be spent on health care. The study blames increased spending on health care by Baby Boomers as one of the reasons for the shocking economic ratio. It also fails to examine the root cause of such a medical malady which is that five out of five Americans are without national health care insurance.

Plutonian Tip-of-the-Day

"If you want to make a mountain out of a molehill, don't dial 911."

U.N. Barks Again

They finally let the U.N. dogs out after Iran, whose nuclear ambitions recently rubbed elbows with Russia and that's a big "no-no" on Earth. The only problem with the United Nations' nuclear watchdog reporting Iran to the U.N. Security Council is that such action carries about as much weight as trying Saddam Hussein in The Hague's World Court. On Pluto, where playing with atoms is illegal, the idea of just telling the big boys, "No-no.", seems to be the biggest "no-no" of them all.

In the April issue of The Pluto Observer

- ☞ Neptune: The Forgotten Planet
- ☞ NASA's New Lunar Ambitions: Fact or Science Fiction
- ☞ When alien abductees lash out in public